STUDENT’S GUIDE TO LITERATURE

"You never stop learning how to read. There are always new objects, new things to see, new ways of seeing, new dialogues with other readers."

Literature at MIT embraces an expansive vision of literary study. We are linked by a common interest in problems of narrative, aesthetics, genre, and media, but our curriculum explores a broad array of written, oral, and visual forms, ranging from the ancient world to the 21st century. We teach poetry, drama, and prose fiction, and also film, television, comics, memoirs, and folk music. Our courses engage students in the pleasures and challenges of reading and interpretation, expose them to fresh ways of thinking about the world, and develop valuable, transferable skills in writing and communication.

Concentrating

Students come to Literature to fulfill their concentrations for many reasons. Some love to read great books, plays, or poems, or want to explore film and media studies. Some wish to hone their skills in thinking and writing about literary questions.

Requirements

Tier II (Samples and Intermediate): one or two intermediate subjects (21L.430 through 21L.518). Two six-unit sampling subjects (21L.310 through 21L.325, 21L.338 and 339, and 21L.345 through 21L.355) may be combined to count as one twelve-unit intermediate subject.

Tier III (Seminars): one seminar subject (21L.640 through 21L.715).

One or Two subjects unrestricted

Concentrations must form a coherent group. In addition to the required three subjects, a fourth subject is strongly recommended.

Minoring

A Literature Minor lays the foundation for advanced study by enhancing the student’s appreciation of major narrative, poetic, and dramatic texts in relation to the cultures that produced them. In addition, it allows the student to develop familiarity with interdisciplinary approaches, and encourages engagement with film and newer media.

Requirements

Tier I (Introductory): at least one and no more than two introductory literature subjects (21L.000 through 21L.048).

Tier II (Samples and Intermediate): two or three intermediate subjects (21L.430 through 21L.518). Two six-unit sampling subjects (21L.310 through 21L.325, 21L.338 and 339, and 21L.345 through 21L.355) may be combined to count as one twelve-unit intermediate subject.

Tier III (Seminars): at least two seminar subjects (21L.701 through 21L.715).

In addition, a Literature Minor is subject to the following constraints: at least two subjects in a minor program must center on materials dating before 1900. You cannot minor and major in the same area.

Majoring

Majoring in Literature at MIT combines broad coverage of a range of different literary and cultural fields with in-depth exploration of particular domains. Students organize their restricted electives in Literature through the Breadth Requirement according to one of two rubrics (see below): historical periods or thematic complexes. More sustained exploration of specific domains is achieved by taking seminars in areas of interest. In addition, students contemplating graduate work in Literature or a related field are encouraged to consider completing a Literature thesis.

Breadth Requirements

Chosen in consultation with a faculty advisor, restricted electives must be taken in 4 of 5 thematic complexes or historical periods (3 of 5 for Joint Majors).

Thematic Complexes

- Historical Period
- Genre
- Author Study
- Film, Media and Popular Culture
- Gender Studies, Ethnic Studies, and Theory

Historical Periods

- Ancient and Medieval
- Renaissance
- Restoration and 18th Century
- 19th Century
- 20th Century and Contemporary

Requirements

Full Major or Double Major

180-198 units beyond GIRS

10 subjects, divided as follows:

- 2 CI-Ms to fulfill GIR requirement
- 3 at Seminar level
- 3 unrestricted Literature electives

Double majors must complete all requirements of their 2nd major. Consult with 2nd major advisor.

Joint Major (21L/E or 21L/S)

180 units beyond GIRS

14 subjects, divided as follows:

- 6 engineering or science subjects*
- 2 at Seminar level
- 3 unrestricted Literature electives

*Consult with your engineering or science departments as to their specific requirements for joint majoring in that field.

Thesis: majors are encouraged to complete a thesis or a senior project in their senior year. This allows students to pursue an individualized course of study and create a lasting work of scholarship, acquiring new research and communication skills in the process.

Transfer Credit: to receive transfer credit in Literature, the transfer credit examiner must decide (a) whether the work done at an outside institution is comparable in quality and quantity to warrant credit; and (b) what kind of credit is appropriate. There is thus no guarantee that transfer credit will be granted, nor is it guaranteed, even when credit is granted, that a student will receive the 12 units of credit usual for Literature subjects at MIT.
